

airline stocks will make them money but because the stock they own in banks that lend the airlines money, the stock they own in oil companies that sell the airlines fuel and the bonds they own in airports will all soar as money that should be going to us is spread out amongst them instead.

I used to have a dog; I used to laugh as she chased her tail. She couldn't catch her tail because the faster she moved her head towards her tail the faster her tail moved away from her head. Well airline workers have been doing the same thing my dog used to do, only thing is after a few seconds my dog was smart enough to realize that no matter how hard she tried she would never catch her tail. Airline workers have been giving concessions in the name of making the airlines profitable for over twenty years. It's time we stop chasing our tails. The more we give the more the banks, the oil companies, the airports and other vendors can charge the airline for what they provide, their share of the revenue pie will continue to grow as ours continues to shrink, that's where the profits have been for the last 75 years and where they will continue to be for the next 75 years. If you want to see an investment pay off get your compensation back and take that money and invest in the oil companies, the banks or buy bonds, follow Crandall's advice, do not invest in the airlines, you've lost enough already.

Keep giving them what they want and they have no reason to give us what we need.
